

ALL-AMERICANS

The origin of the USBWA All-America Team ...

The USBWA's first All-America team was chosen in the 1956-57 season and was featured in LOOK magazine. Following is an excerpt from the April 2, 1957 issue of the magazine and outlines the initial selection process.

By Tim Cohane and I.R. McVay

In August of 1956, the experts were formed into the USBWA, due principally to the efforts of Bob Russell of the Chicago Daily News, the organization's first president. Russell, in consultation with the USBWA and LOOK, also set up the mechanism by which the All America was selected. Here is how it worked:

Russell appointed a national selection committee made up of one man from each of the eight National Collegiate Athletic Association districts. There were Joe Looney, Boston Herald, District 1; Irving Marsh, New York Herald Tribune, District 2; Edgar Allen, Nashville Banner, District 3; Bob Russell, Chicago Daily News, District 4; Bob Busby, Kansas City Star, District 5; Bob Rule, Houston Press, District 6; Ralph Moore, Denver Post, District 7; Jack Geyer, Los Angeles Times, District 8.

They met in Chicago toward the end of the season. At their request, the sports editor and associate sports editor of LOOK attended in an advisory capacity. First, the selection committee studied the nominations for the All America. The nominations had been submitted by the membership of the USBWA, which now numbers 400. Each nominee was discussed, and the committee finally narrowed its choice down to the top ten. The committee also picked a top five for each of the eight NCAA districts.

•

The story also indicated that members of the first USBWA All-America Team received Lord Elgin watches and appeared on The Ed Sullivan Show on March 24.

LOOK presented the USBWA All-America Team through the 1969-70 season.

•

The USBWA formally expanded its All-America selections to include 15 players on three teams for the first time in the 2018-19 season. Once before, in the 1997-98 season, the USBWA honored 15 players as All-Americans.
